Boo's Views by Kyra Williams

Health, healthy, healthier...

What is health? Is it eating better? Is it working out more? Is it getting a smiley face on your wellness check once a year? For anyone, especially our students, health and being healthy can become very confusing. As we take a look into health with our students, we teach that healthy looks different on each person because God made us all unique and different. Health for some can be managing stress or anxiety better. For others, it may be getting out and moving more or making a more nutritious decision at snack time. By encouraging our students to look at food differently we might discover a new love for foods we never would have tried before. This week, our 5th-8th girls PE classes have delved into "superfoods". From smoothies to fruit parfaits to avocado muffins to kale mac n cheese, they have learned how to incorporate nutrient packed foods into delicious recipes.

As life-long learners we all need to remind ourselves that it is never too late to make healthier choices or even have a life-style change. If you started a New Year resolution and are still sticking with it, that is awesome! If you started one and gave up, hit the restart button. Incorporate one health initiative into your family.
